

MOTHER OF KIDNAPPED CALEB MILNE ARRIVES AT DOYLESTOWN HOSPITAL; SEES RELEASED SON; BOY THROWN FROM CAR

Scion of Wealthy Philadelphia Family is Found Bound and Gagged Along York Road Late Last Night — Ends Search of Several Days — G-Men on Guard at Hospital

(By International News Service)

DOYLESTOWN, Dec. 19—Grief-stricken and on the verge of collapse, the mother of Caleb Milne, 4th, arrived here by automobile and was whisked immediately to Doylestown Emergency Hospital, where her son, scion of a wealthy family, is confined after he was released by his kidnappers.

The mother leaned heavily on the arm of a younger son, Aubrey, as she left the car in which she made the trip here from Woodstock, N. Y. A Federal agent aided the son in supporting her.

The hospital was closely guarded by Federal agents. G-men patrolled the ground, scrutinizing the throng of curious which had gathered.

Shortly after Mrs. Milne arrived, reporters stationed outside saw the mother appear in a sun parlor in the rear of the hospital, and she conferred with G-men. Their conversation was guarded by the closed windows, but a series of maps held by the Federal agents spread on the table were being examined.

As the 23-year-old youth lay moaning and delirious today a veritable army of G-men and Pennsylvania State Police began a painstaking hunt for his kidnappers.

Bound and gagged, his eyes and mouth taped shut, young Milne was found lying in a ditch on the York Road seven miles from here, late last night.

He had been thrown from a swift-moving automobile.

There were reports the youth's millionaire grandfather, Caleb Milne, 2nd, had paid $25,000 for his release.

This could not be verified, however, as G-men and state police flatly refused to discuss the case until they had had a chance to question the youth.

At the hospital, physicians said the young society actor and writer's condition was serious. He was described as being in a comatose state and near a complete collapse.

There were no less than 34 hypodermic needle punctures on the youth's left arm, the doctors said and a considerable quantity of morphine in his system. In addition he had a bad cold and appeared on the verge of pneumonia.

Throughout the night, hospital attendants reported, he cried out:

"Don't . . . don't give me the needles!"

"Don't let them stick more needles into me!"

When the Federal men will be able to question the youth about his abduction appeared highly problematical in view of his condition.

The youth, who disappeared from his apartment in New York City on Saturday morning, was found by S. R. Gerhart, a traveling salesman, who, by an odd coincidence, lives within ten blocks of the home of Milne's grandfather in Philadelphia.

He was driving from Scranton to

Metelski Nursing Bruises

Newark, N. J., Dec. 19—"Tough Guy" Edward Metelski, the Dillinger of New Jersey, with his "trusty," Paul Semenkewitz, who broke out of the Middlesex County Jail Saturday night, were nursing black eyes and bruises in police headquarters today.

The two desperadoes were captured and "mussed up" by detectives and state troopers last night when hunger forced them to seek food at the Purify Restaurant in the heart of Newark.

"Don't kill me, don't kill me!" Metelski pleaded. Metelski was overtaken by officers outside the restaurant and two shots were fired when he attempted to return the fire, but his revolver jammed and detectives leaped upon him and beat him unconscious.

Semenkewitz was overtaken in the restaurant where he had gone to order three hamburgers and two containers of coffee to get out in a "h— of a hurry." He too was knocked unconscious. Metelski, who was awaiting trial for the murder of a state trooper, broke out of jail with the aid of a gun which had been smuggled into him.

The weapon was found on him last night. It had not yet been learned whether Semenkewitz, a trusty, accompanied Metelski willingly or the desperado forced him to go.

Alfred Fuerschner, warden of the jail, lost his position.

Langhorne, Dec. 19—Albert W. Butterworth, 67, president of a Philadelphia textile company, is dead at his home here today after a sudden illness.

Start Hauptmann Appeal

New York, Dec. 19—Bruno Richard Hauptmann and his lawyers today started their appeal that will mean life or death for the Bronx carpenter, awaiting execution for the murder of the Lindbergh baby. The one-time machine-gunner's attorneys are visiting him in his death cell.

In the meantime, rumors that the defense was getting new evidence, was heard on all sides.

The Evening Journal says it learned from a high New Jersey politician that secret evidence supposedly packed with dynamite and "exposed by the state" at Hauptmann's trial will be barred by the Court of Pardons on the orders of Governor Hoffman. The newspaper declares that "the (Governor or Hoffman) is determined that every bit of truth either for or against Hauptmann will be told."

Retired Farmer Dies Of A Heart Attack

NEWTOWN, Dec. 19—Robert Scott, a retired farmer, of 516 East Centre avenue, here, died suddenly of a heart attack Tuesday. He had been suffering from a heart ailment for the past three years. He was 64 years old.

Born on a farm near Yardley, he was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Scott. He later operated his own farm for 20 years at Woodside, a few miles southeast of here, and came to Newtown to live 11 years ago when he gave up active work. He was a member of Newtown Presbyterian Church, and funeral services will be conducted at his home by the Rev. Jacob Long, pastor of that church, Saturday afternoon, at 2 o'clock. Burial will be in Newtown Cemetery.

Mr. Scott married Leonora C. Van Horn, of Emille. She survives him together with a son, Harry T., of Newtown, and a daughter, Mabel V., of Philadelphia.

DR. A. F. MYERS FETED BY PHYSICIANS AT DINNER

Served As Secretary-Treasurer of Bucks County Medical Society for 40 Years

AFFAIR AT DOYLESTOWN

DOYLESTOWN, Dec. 19—As an evidence of appreciation of 40 years of faithful and efficient service as secretary-treasurer of the Bucks County Medical Society, a testimonial dinner was tendered to Anthony Fretz Myers, M. D., by members of the society last evening. The scene of the function was the Fountain House, the attendants totalling 45.

Acting as toastmaster for the occasion was Dr. H. Doyle Webb, Bristol, president of the society. The arrangements were in charge of Dr. J. Fred Wagner, Bristol, and a committee of assistants.

A program of addresses, in which the honored guest was lauded for his untiring efforts in behalf of the society for four decades; together with an appetizing dinner, and excellent musical selections, made for a pleasant evening.

Dr. Webb introduced as speakers for the affair: Dr. Frank Lehman, who in presenting Dr. Myers spoke briefly of the efficient services and loyal support of the society on the part of the guest of honor; Dr. Henry I. Klopp, superintendent of the Allentown state hospital, and a close friend of Dr. Myers; Dr. Edgar S. Buyers, Norristown, district councillor of the society; Judge Calvin S. Boyer, of the Bucks County courts; Charles M. Meredith, editor of the Quakertown Free Press; George Hotchkiss, editor of the Doylestown Daily Intelligencer; Mrs. C. T. Cressley, Sellersville, president of the Women's Auxiliary of the Bucks County Medical Society.

Greetings were read by Dr. Wagner from a number of prominent physicians, these including: J. B. M. Whyatt, Kittanning; Walter H. Brown, a former member of the society, and now affiliated with the U. S. Public Health Service; Wilmer Krusen, Philadelphia; Elmer Funk, Reading; Dr. Butz, Allentown; Dr. Parker, Norristown; Dr. Donaldson, Pittsburgh; secretary of the state medical society; Dr. Estes, Bethlehem.

A box of red roses was presented to Dr. Myers, presentation being made by Dr. Buyers on behalf of the state society. Dr. Webb tendered the county society's gift to the honored one, this being a smoking jacket.

The musical selections were by the Gamble Concert Company of Langhorne, the trio including Ernest Gamble, Verna Page, Langhorne; and Miss Emma Zuern, Philadelphia. Pleasing selections interspersed the program of the evening.

Members of Dr. Myers' family were present, including his wife, daughter and son.

The menu: half grapefruit, celery, olives, sweet pickles, cole slaw, cream of tomato soup with chestnut cream, roast Vermont turkey, whipped cream, cranberry jelly, mashed potatoes, new green peas, lettuce with Roquefort cheese dressing, hot mince pie with vanilla ice cream, hot rolls, butter, assorted salted nuts, coffee, mints.

AN INDIGESTIBLE HOT DOG

(New York American, December 15, 1935)

The Brooklyn Eagle of December 3 prints this despatch from its Washington Bureau: "George F. Peek's resignation as President of the Export-Import Banks established the fact today that the last of the Bernard M. Baruch Democrats at President Roosevelt's elbow has departed.

"Thus the conservative Baruch has been succeeded in influence by the academic liberal, Professor Felix Frankfurter, of Harvard University, who has more of his proteges in responsible Government positions than any other Presidential adviser."

This coincides perfectly with what General Hugh Johnson said several months ago in the Saturday Evening Post: "FELIX FRANKFURTER IS THE MOST INFLUENTIAL SINGLE INDIVIDUAL IN THE UNITED STATES."

With the resignation of George F. Peek because he could no longer tolerate association with an INTERNATIONALLY-MINDED ADMINISTRATION, the field is now left clear for the UNOPPOSED DOMINATION of the most internationally-minded figure in the United States, the AUSTRIAN-BORN MARXIST, FELIX FRANKFURTER.

As the Eagle points out, this composite back-door Cabinet in himself has dictated more GOVERNMENT POSITIONS "THAN ANY OTHER PRESIDENTIAL ADVISER."

Frankfurter is an active member of the Communistic "American Civil Liberties Union."

The whole mental make-up and the physical activities of the man, Frankfurter, are EXTREME LEFT.

This dominant power in the Roosevelt Administration brings with him in his very bones and blood the ANTI-INDIVIDUALISTIC, CLICK-HEEL AND GOOSE-STEP doctrines of Central Europe, where there were born the two men who made the Russian slave-state possible, Karl Marx and Frederick Engels.

When men like Peek desert the ship of state it is because that ship is HEADED FOR A RUSSIAN PORT.

We now have an irresponsible Frankfurter-Coney Island-Communistic Administration—a sort of INTERNATIONAL HOT-DOG STAND, with IMPORTED hot dogs only on display.

This new kind of circus sandwich, with Roosevelt as the covers and Frankfurter inside, is going to give folks a bad case of political indigestion.

CLAIMS DAMAGES OF $3,500 FOR A FALL

Mr. and Mrs. G. Daunhauser,
Doylestown, Name Miss
Vernon E. Moore in Suit

OTHER SUITS FILED

DOYLESTOWN, Dec. 19—Claiming damages amounting to $3500, Emille Dannhauser and her husband, George Dannhauser, of this place, have named Miss Vernon E. Moore, 6 South Main street, this place, defendant in an action of trespass.

In the statement of claim, filed in the Prothonotary's office, the plaintiffs allege that on February 27, 1935, Emille Dannhauser was descending the staircase, leading from the second floor to the street, when she fell down numerous steps.

She described in detail the injuries which she suffered. In her own right she claims damages amounting to $2500, and her husband claims the sum of $1000.

An 18-year-old son, Vard V. Transue and his father, J. Elmer Transue, of Upper Makefield township, have filed an action in trespass in the court of Common Pleas, here, naming Vernon E. Moore, 4 Barnes street, Trenton, N. J., the defendant in a $15,000 automobile damage suit.

According to the statement of claim the 18-year-old youth was riding a motorcycle on the highway between Trenton and Newtown, near Yardley, December 23, 1933, when he collided with a car driven by Raymond Evans an employee of the defendant corporation.

Transue alleges he suffered a broken leg, chest and shoulder injuries, and numerous other hurts and charges Evans with carelessness and negligence.

The youth, who was only 16 at the time of the accident, claims the sum of $10,000 and his father seeks an additional $5,000 for expenditures involved.

Charging her husband with desertion, Mrs. Mary Tobias has filed a libel in divorce in the Court of Common Pleas against Zoltan Tobias.

The respondent's address is 17 Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn, N. Y. The libellant, who was employed as a domestic until 1933, alleges they were married in 1909 in City Hall in New York City.

Since October 20, 1934, she has been residing with her sister, Mrs. Julia Damm, of Tinicum. The desertion is alleged to have taken place October 26, 1930.

COMPREHENSIVE PROGRAM ADOPTED BY FATHERS

Nine Sub-Committees Named To Arrange For Various
Speakers and Topics

PLAN A "GYM" CLASS

Meeting in the high school auditorium, the Fathers' Association of the Bristol public schools held its regular monthly meeting last evening, with vice-president Paul V. Forster presiding. Of major interest and importance from the business standpoint was the report of the committee of nine regarding a planned program for the association. This committee, which consisted of Harry Baurath, Walter J. Rosser, I. Johnston Hetherington, Warren Woodruff, Johnson McAuley, Samuel Conklin, Albert Loechner, Ralph Scheffey and Alfred McLaughlin, recommended that speakers be obtained to present in an impartial, thorough manner the problems of school taxation, from the standpoint of the State, as well as of Bristol itself. It was suggested that the speakers cover such points as the methods of assessment, the proportionate amount of taxes collected, the efforts made to collect unpaid taxes, and the method of distributing State appropriations for school purposes.

The committee also recommended that a gymnasium class be held once a week for the benefit of the members of the association. To inaugurate a program of direct aid to sundry school activities, the committee suggested that the association make a definite effort to support financially a baseball team in the high school, so that Bristol may not be in last year's embarrassing position of being without a team. In this connection, it was ordered that a committee be appointed to make plans for a card party, the proceeds of which will be used for the high school baseball team.

In its final recommendation, the committee suggested the appointment of nine sub-committees, each having as its chairman a member of the committee of nine, to consider all these problems still further and to incorporate in a written report any and all new recommendations deemed to be of value. From these reports a complete, comprehensive program will then be formulated and submitted for adoption at the meeting in January.

BUNDLE TOTING

Bundles, more bundles and still more bundles. Bundles, rather than people, are walking the streets from now until Christmas. There is much truth in the cartoon picturing the typical man bringing up the rear like an overloaded clothes tree. Bundle time begins about six weeks before Christmas and ends after the gifts that do not fit or suit have been exchanged at the stores.

A bundle is an indefinable mass done up in brown paper and tied with string. It exists for the purpose of being carried. Bundles may be divided roughly into two classes, those that are forever coming undone and those that seem utterly incapable of coming undone.

Bundles are such frequent incidents in life that no well-directed household would think of going without a supply of brown paper and string for doing them up. It is a curious fact, however, that no matter how large and miscellaneous the supply, it is rarely ever possible to find just the right size sheet of paper, while the string is almost invariably too short. A parcel is a bundle trying to put on airs.

Persons who make up bundles hold the belief that the greater number of knots the stronger the bundle. On the other hand, persons who open bundles would as soon spend principal as cut a knot. Between the two the labor expended annually in the United States in tying and untying bundles would be sufficient to build a broad highway from Portland, Maine, to Portland, Oregon.

One good bundle deserves another, it seems. At least it invariably happens that when one bundle must be carried away or brought to the house there are others to occupy the attention of the other arm.

MARK THATCHER SPOKE

County Solicitor Delivers A
Stirring Address Denouncing
Democratic Administration

(By Staff Correspondent)

LANGHORNE, Dec. 19—Addressing over 200 Republicans of Bucks County assembled in the banquet hall of the Bucks County Country Club, here, last night, Mark Thatcher, Esquire, solicitor of Bucks County, stirred an enthusiastic audience with an address enunciating Republican principles and attacking the Roosevelt administration for its betrayal of the people.

"Is it mere coincidence that practically every major policy and act of the whole New Deal program either has been declared unconstitutional or is now in process of litigation, with the strong probabilities in favor of unconstitutionality?" asked Mr. Thatcher.

Then continuing, he asked: "Can this be attributed wholly to ignorance, inexperience and unvarying ineptitude? Or is there something far more sinister in the repeated enactments of unconstitutional legislation, the bludgeoning of business and sabotage of recovery, the deliberate attempts to give the Supreme Court and the Constitution a black eye, the efforts to array one group against another, the persistent determination to portray the producers of the nation's wealth as predatory criminals, the tremendous increase in bureaucracy, the huge expenditures to put the Government in competition with private enterprise, the terrific waste in conflicting policies which obviously offset and defeat each other—all summed up in a general abandonment of government by law, and adoption of the abhorrent, dangerous and wholly un-American departure of government by Executive Edict?"

Mr. Thatcher stated that next year's Presidential campaign will stand out as one of the most momentous since the Civil War and that the fundamental concepts of the Federal Government will be the chief issues of the struggle.

It was a G. O. P. Night and active workers in the party from various sections of Bucks County gathered in the club house for what was generally termed a "victory dinner."

The dining hall was attractively decorated for the occasion with a liberal display of American flags. Senator Clarence J. Buckman was the toastmaster and following the dinner there was a program of entertainment given by professional entertainers.

In his remarks prefacing the introduction of the speaker of the evening, Senator Buckman said: "This is a victory dinner not only to celebrate the victory of the last campaign, but also to mark the opening of a new campaign. We are going to keep on winning until we have routed the Democrats for good. We only have one Democratic administration in a generation."

At this point the toastmaster called upon three officials elected on November 5th: Jesse Webster, director of the poor; Daniel Hendricks, clerk of quarter sessions; and Joseph Baker, county commissioner.

Mr. Thatcher's address follows in full:

I am so earnest in what I want to put before you tonight, and I feel so deeply about it, that in behalf of accuracy as well as of a restraint that I might not be able to exercise in an extemporaneous address, I have taken what for me is the unusual course of putting my thoughts into writing—and with your indulgence will read.

We have shared in a notable and praiseworthy success. That success means much and it was well earned. It was accomplished in the face of difficult and unusual obstacles, and is something to be proud of. It is right and proper, therefore, that we should come together as we have tonight in a spirit of satisfaction with a job well done.

The success that we are celebrating could not have been had, except for the untiring and self-sacrificing efforts of you who are here and who may proudly say that you represent the real workers of the Republican Party in this section of Bucks County. The result of the election in November stands as a monument to the patriotic zeal of you and your fellow Republican workers in other parts of the County.

But we cannot disregard, and we must not under-rate, the fact that your best endeavors would have amounted to little, if they had not been of such character and purpose as to have inspired affirmative reaction in the intelligence and patriotism of those

REALITIES YET TO FACE

Great Britain's minister of war, Alfred Duff-Cooper, speaks as a realist when he says the Anglo-French peace plan is likely to fail "because it is a very difficult thing, when war has been going on for a few months, to find terms that will sat-isfy both sides."

But more important realities are yet to face by the gentlemen who run the world's governments before there can be any good chance of controlling war. These realities re-late to armament. If it is difficult to stop war once started, it is also dif-ficult to prevent war while arma-ment forms the basis for interna-tional relations. Perhaps it is use-ful to hope for arms reduction in the world's present confusion. But would it be hopeless if there were some leader to teach that no other escape from war was possible?

The national state of mind essen-tial to war nowadays, when a coun-try must be mobilized not only in military units at the front but in industrial units behind the lines, is developed against the background of armament. As long as armament continues to be the world's chief arbiter, a reality the statesmen must face is that nations will be stirred to war and once in war will not easily be taken out of war.

AND/OR

At last there is hope that mean-ingless catch phrases will be legally condemned. In the supreme court of Wisconsin, Justice Chester A. Fow-ler lambasted lawyers for using the combination of conjunctions, and/or. The words occurred in an insurance adjustment case.

Said Justice Fowler: "We are confronted with the task of constru-ing 'and/or' that befuddling, name-less thing, that Janus-faced verbal monstrosity, the child of a brain of someone too lazy or too dull to know what he did mean, now commonly used by lawyers in drafting docu-ments."

Spoken like a gentleman and a scholar! The judiciary needs more Justice Fowlers.

And while the courts are at the job of teaching the lawyers and law makers the English language, they will do well to take a whack at "un-less and until," and "when, as and if," and a whole lot of other chil-dren of lazy or too astute brains.

But then, of course, if the laws were made plain, there would be fewer law suits and fewer jobs for lawyers.

What's the use? If a great inven-tion makes the world 50 per cent richer, it always makes war 50 per cent more destructive.

Surely you recall off-hand the names, Dant, Passy, Ducommun, Gobat, Cremer, Moneta, Rajer and Bernhart—all Nobel peace prize winners in other years.

A few humorists neglected to al-lude to James Roosevelt, late of a yeast company, as a rising young man. We now can only attribute it to absent-mindedness.

Let us look now through the fore-ign advices and see how H Duce is progressing with his doctrine of the freedom of the seize.

"WIFE IN CUSTODY" by BEATRICE LUBITZ

CHAPTER XXXII

Both Stella and Irene were burst-ing with scientific formulae for the care and raising of children. Agnes too threw herself wholeheartedly into the subject. She tried to get Irene to weave Christian Science into the process and, even though her suggestions were snubbed, she did not lose heart. Only Ethel re-fused to wallow in this "orgy of child-raising" as she called it.

"Oh, do have a baby, Ethel. It's the consummation of all that's fine and womanly in you," Stella urged one evening when they met at Ana-tasia's.

"Rats," Ethel said good-natured-ly. "Neither Eddy nor I want a child. We're happy the way we are, thanks."

"You're making a mistake," Stella insisted. "Look at Irene, how she's wound Dirk around her finger by having the baby."

"You weren't so spectacularly successful," Agnes, who felt that Stella's remark belittled her hold on Carl, observed pointedly.

Stella flushed. Ethel tried to cover the break. "How is Helen's baby?"

"My dear, she's simply dragging that kid up. She's not keeping weight charts or height records. Of course, Walter says the child's a picture. I don't go there, you know, since the way Helen behaved toward me, but Walter says she doesn't even have the child under the care of a specialist!"

"I'm not sure at Helen," Agnes interposed eagerly. "I'd go with you, Ethel."

"I will, too," decided Stella. "After all, we never actually had words, Helen and I, you know. Besides, it's my brother's house!"

And so Helen suddenly and with-out warning found her apartment once more a hub for their comings and goings.

Because of the strain on her health as the result of her operation, Stella had persuaded Walter that she could return to the Salon only on a part-time basis—at full-time pay, of course. Walter had grumbled a bit but he paid the bills just the same and Stella's salary went on. And now a new storm was gather-ing. Agnes was beginning to nag at Walter. If Stella worked only part-time, why should she work all day? Besides, Agnes intended to have a nervous breakdown.

"What good is your Christian Science if you get breakdowns just the same?" Walter demanded an-grily.

Agnes dissolved in tears and Walter had to repent his harshness. After a long, hysterical fuss, Agnes won out. She came in only part-time and for a long time both Stella and Agnes were careful to let Wal-ter know that so expert was their management that even on a half-time basis they were able to keep up the morale of the Salons and even increase the receipts!

"Don't you think you ought to protect this living room step by a gate, Helen?" Irene asked.

They were having tea at Helen's new apartment in the same house on Madison Avenue, on the occasion of Irene's first official visit since the Stella affair.

"I don't think it's necessary, Irene. I want to teach her self-reliance. If she crawls too near, she'll fall and bump herself. Next time she'll be more careful."

"My dear, it's a commendably Spartan attitude but there can be a fractured skull, you know."

"She's avoided going near that step so far, Irene. I'm not know-ing as she went out with her.

danger lurks on the other side. She's really very clever about it."

Irene shrugged. "Isn't the floor too drafty for her to crawl?" she ob-served as she nibbled at the little cakes.

"I don't think so. I have deflectors in all the open windows," Helen said rather wearily. "Tea, Agnes?"

"No, thanks, but if you have some Poland water—I'm taking a cure."

"I'm sorry, I haven't. Next time I shall have some for you."

"You ought to drink it, Helen. It's fine for the complexion."

Helen smiled. "Tea, Stella?"

"Thanks, half a cup. Wells weighs twelve pounds, doesn't he, Irene? He's got a wonderful physique. What does Gracie weigh now, Helen?"

"About double that, I fancy. More cakes, Irene?"

"You fancy! Don't you know?"

"Fredericks weighed her last week but I've forgotten."

"Still got that dame! She's an awful nurse, if you ask me, Helen. For the money you pay her, you could get someone really scientific."

"Sh—she's in the next room."

"You ought to weigh her every night and note it, then you can make a graph of her gain or possible loss," Stella said primly.

"I keep weight and height charts for Wells," Irene observed.

"What possible benefit can there be? If you are doing all that is sensible, the child is bound to gain and the loss of an ounce or so is sometimes negligible."

"That isn't the point, Helen. You've got to do what's right."

Helen flushed. "I do—according to my light."

"I'm surprised Walter is agree-able to your—your—baphazard way," Irene said.

"Does Dirk approve of your scien-tific ways?"

"Certainly," Irene answered with some asperity. "Oh, I know Ces has probably been complaining because I don't permit the old folks to smother Wells with kisses when they come."

"Ces has never said a word, Irene."

"You see a lot of them, don't you—Dirk too?" Stella added. "You're lucky Irene isn't jealous."

Irene grinned. "Jealous? Come, come, Stella, Dirk isn't Jerry, you know."

"You don't have to rub it in, Irene."

"No, I see that. One can be quite subtle with you these days, darling, but Helen, to come back to our dis-cussion, I really think Gracie shouldn't be allowed to crawl around the living room. If she must crawl, you ought to keep her in the nursery where the floor can be kept sterile. Look at the germs she is being ex-posed to! We must surely have trekked germs in."

"I don't believe in germs," Agnes announced suddenly.

"Oh, rot, what do you know? You have no children—any more than I have," Stella interrupted. "Irene is right. The floor is thick with germs."

"All right, I'll pick her up. Come to mama, darling. Little elf! Frede-ricks," she called, "you can take Gracie now." Helen pressed her hot face into the child's silken hair. Gracie cooed with pleasure. "You sweet," Helen murmured.

Miss Fredericks came in and with-out a glance at the others took the baby.

"Come, precious, come to Fritzie. Time for Gracie's bath."

The baby greeted the nurse with a broad smile and coos of delight.

"My precious," the nurse whis-pered as she went out with her.

"What specialist have you got Gracie under?"

"None, Irene. I have her under no specialist nor do I intend to put her under one, unless, God forbid, she is ill. Dr. Johnson in Bound Brook gave me a diet for her and I use my own judgment. She is thriv-ing beautifully. I don't want to make a hypochondriac of my baby."

There was a little silence. Agnes, who had preached this same doc-trine on behalf of Christian Science, now squirmed to disagree with Helen but couldn't. Stella's eyebrows shot up. She tapped her carefully slipper-shod foot and murmured, "Well, everyone according to his lights. I must be toddling. Coming, Irene?"

"Yes, I want to be back in time to supervise Wells' bath."

A few nights later as Walter and Helen, arms entwined, hung over the crib listening to the deep rhyth-mic breathing of the sleeping child, Walter said suddenly:

"Don't you think you ought to take her to a baby doctor every other week or so to be sure she's all right?"

"You mean a specialist, don't you?"

"Yes, that's it, a baby specialist!"

"No, I don't, Walter. She's thriv-ing beautifully. She's well and happy and she laughs all the time. Don't you think that's a fair test of health?"

"Yes, but there may be things you're not doing."

"You mean I ought to keep charts and graphs?"

"Why, yes."

"Like Irene."

"It's the most modern way."

"So they've already told me, Wal-ter. Now let me make myself clear. This is my baby and I'm going to raise it in the old-fashioned com-mon sense way. I was at Irene's yesterday. She's feeding Wells a raw vegetable diet."

The specialist recommended it. It's a diet rich in vitamins."

"Yes, and all the while I was there Wells howled. I think the baby's starved ever through the curve of the chart or whatever nonsense it is, curves up. Do you ever hear Gracie scream like that?"

"She is an exceptionally good baby, Helen."

"There's no such thing as an ex-ceptionally good baby. She's an ex-ceptionally well baby because I take good sensible care of her. No fads, no modern science to confuse me. Now, Walter, I don't want to be cross, but please don't bring me any more suggestions from the Salons on how to raise Gracie." Her voice trembled.

He rose. "I don't see why you're getting excited, dear. I was only suggesting."

"I think Irene's baby is pathetic, yet I wouldn't dream of venturing an opinion, much less a suggestion." She bit her lip.

The fire was burning brightly now. Walter carefully set up the fire-screen.

"I can't understand you lately. You're always so sweet until you start to talk about my sisters. Then you fly off the handle."

She laughed. "Darling, I'm sorry." She held out her hands and he sunk to the floor, his head on her knees.

"Walter, I suppose they'll always be here and I'll have to learn to tolerate them. You'll never know how beau-tifully I've succeeded because you're not around to hear when they say those things to me. But they shan't run my baby, do you hear? That I won't permit!"

Thousands of men and women of Bucks County who responded so splen-didly to Republican appeal and Re-publican principles.

For, in the final analysis, they were the ones who trekked to the voting places in every precinct of the County, and, in their combined numbers, chalked up the vote which justified all your efforts and spelled conclusive Republican victory.

But with the deliberate intent of sounding a serious note here tonight, I am going to express the thought now, as the basis of whatever else I shall have to say, that unless a vic-tory is so complete and comprehensive as to be final in its lasting conse-quences, it cannot be regarded as more than a stepping-stone to subse-quent achievement.

I would not want to be misunder-stood. I do not for a moment discount the importance of the November re-sult, or the credit that is due every Republican worker—man and woman—who helped to bring that result about. I repeat that without your faithful, intelligent and tireless efforts, that contest could not have been won in the impressive way that it was won. And without that winning, we would have much less on which to base our hope, confidence, energy and determi-nation, in the greater events that con-front us. I am cognizant of all that, and I think I give all of those consid-erations their proper weight as I take the longer view.

But if you will consider what lies ahead, I think you will agree with me that the result of the last election—the result that we are celebrating here tonight as a victory—was, after all, only the satisfying conclusion of a preliminary skirmish. It was an im-portant forerunner—but only to the extent that we make it so will be a determining factor—of the greater battle that is to come next year.

And if we are not successful in that major engagement, then all victories that we may have achieved meanwhile—no matter what their magnitude or importance may seem to be now—will be hollow and meaningless and only mockeries in the recollection.

I claim no originality for the state-ment that the Presidential election of 1936 will be one of the most import-ant, one of the most significant and far-reaching in its consequences, in the entire history of our country. East and West, North and South, thoughtful people, distressingly dis-turbed by all that they see going on about them in the outraged name of government, are proclaiming the fact with a voice and a seriousness that amount to a call to arms.

Yes, we know now that in the Pres-idential contest which is less than a year off, the people of the United States, for the first time in the history of this nation afraid of their own Gov-ernment, will divide upon issues which go as directly to the very foun-dations of the American System, as did those of the Civil War period. But with this great difference: Whereas the questions of that critical period were candidly admitted and frankly fought, you and all others who take your stand with constitutional govern-ment and the system under which this nation came from infancy to su-premacy, will have to contend, among other things, with a kind of deception, a degree of demagoguery, and a form of political bribery, never before intro-duced into a national election in this country.

My friends, a tradition as old as the Presidency itself gives to the occu-pant of that office a strong and seldom-invaded protection against publicly expressed criticism of his mo-tives and purposes. Few occupants of that office have abused that protection or resorted to cowardly and unfair tactics in rebuttal of honest criticism. Indeed, quite the contrary has been the rule in the past, because open criticism and debate are the corol-laries of free speech, and free speech is the very essence of our guaranteed rights, our long-established liberty, and our political independence.

But, led by President Roosevelt him-self, and supported by a million-dollar publicity and propaganda set-up which is paid for entirely out of the taxpayers' money, it has been the estab-lished policy of the New Deal to pub-licly abuse, and to attribute the most sinister motives to, any and all who have dared to raise their voices in honest criticism of the unconstitutional and un-American policies and acts of this Administration.

I say to you frankly, it is my con-viction that no preceding generation of Americans would have shown the tol-erance toward this vicious and cowardly practice that has been shown by the present generation. But the fact is that up to a few months ago, Mr. Roosevelt enjoyed an unpreced-ent immunity from the just resentment which his own acts and repeated state-ments have invited.

But I believe that the preservation of our institutions and our form of constitutional government is far more important than any tradition, and that in the face of an alternative choice, it is the tradition which must be un-hesitatingly thrust aside. Any other course would be as dishonest as it would be disastrous.

In profound seriousness I express

Republicans Stage Victory Dinner; Hear Speeches

The measured opinion that the day of spineless deference, of radio hypnotism, of giddy surrender to that demagogue "you and I, my friends," has passed. There no longer can be a dodging of the facts.

Barring something wholly unforeseen, Mr. Roosevelt will be a candidate to succeed himself. Mr. Roosevelt, his policies, his appointments, his theories of government, his attitude toward the Constitution and the Supreme Court, his efforts to array class against class, the worth of his pledges—all will be issues of that contest. And out of that election next year the American form of government in this country—the United States of America that we know and love—will either emerge victorious over entrenched bureaucracy and already well-established dictatorship, or it will succumb and pass from the scene.

That is the situation, and I say thank God for a Republican Party which will no longer permit the soft-peddling of America in the face of the most deliberate and insidious attack ever made upon our institutions and established form of government.

What is the character of the campaign with which we are likely to be confronted? We cannot foresee definitely, but we probably can forecast with a considerable degree of accuracy.

Go back with me for a moment, if you will, to that day in March, 1933, when President Roosevelt, taking that solemn oath to uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States, just as solemnly told the country that, strictly as recovery measures, he contemplated certain experiments which would be for the duration of the emergency at most, and which he would be the first to abandon if they proved impractical or unsuccessful.

By radio, practically the entire nation took part in that proceeding. Listening with rapt admiration, and with a degree of hope and confidence accorded to few incoming Presidents, it was as though the people of this country were present and applauding as he placed his hand upon the Bible, figuratively looked a hundred and twenty million men, women and children in the eye, took the most serious oath that can be administered to an American citizen, and then added specific and further pledges on his own account.

Square those pledges, if you can, with his stubborn refusal to willingly surrender a single one of those innovations, even when they have broken down of their own weight and impracticability, and have been declared by the Supreme Court to be in contravention of the Constitution he solemnly swore to defend and uphold.

Square that oath, if you can, with his bold letter to a member of Congress, urging that member to vote for the Guffey Coal Bill even though he might feel morally certain that it was in violation of the Constitution.

Square that oath, if you can, with his slur upon the Supreme Court and the Constitution—his open effort to arouse the people of this country against both—when the Court declared the already defunct N. R. A. unconstitutional.

Is it mere coincidence that practically every major policy act of the whole New Deal program either has been declared unconstitutional or is now in process of litigation, with the strong probabilities in favor of unconstitutionality? Can this be attributed wholly to ignorance, inexperience and unvarying ineptitude? Or is there something far more sinister in the repeated enactments of unconstitutional legislation, the bludgeoning of business and sabotage of recovery, the deliberate attempts to give the Supreme Court and the Constitution a black eye, the efforts to array one group against another, the persistent determination to portray the producers of the nation's wealth as predatory criminals, the tremendous increase in bureaucracy, the huge expenditures to put the Government in competition with private enterprise, the terrific waste in conflicting policies which obviously offset and defeat each other—all summed up in a general abandonment of government by law, and adoption of the abhorrent, dangerous and wholly un-American departure of government by Executive Edict?

The implications of this so-called New Deal are so sinister that to permit a tradition to prevent frank and fearless discussion of them and their purpose would be nothing short of spineless stupidity.

And out of what kind of pledges—the most specific and unqualified that could be made—did this piling up of debt, this usurpation of power, this wholesale establishment of bureaucracy, and this sapping at the very foundations of the American form of government, materialize?

Addressing the Chicago Convention which had nominated him—and through that Convention the country at large, Mr. Roosevelt said: (I quote)

"Our Party says clearly that Government income must meet prospective expenditures. . . . by our example at Washington we shall point the way of economy to local government. . . . I propose that government of all kinds, big and little, be made solvent, and that the example be set by the President of the United States. . . . A platform is a promise, binding on the party and its candidates. . . . The Platform you have adopted is clear. I accept it one hundred per cent."

And what was pledged by that Democratic Platform which Mr. Roosevelt said then he considered binding on the Party and its candidates, and which he accepted, one hundred per cent? I quote from that Platform:

"Immediate and drastic reduction in Government expenditure. . . . A Federal budget, annually balanced. . . . We condemn the unsound policy of restricting agricultural products to the demands of the domestic market."

What were some of the other Roosevelt pledges? I quote from the official copies of his campaign speeches. Listen!

At Sioux City, Iowa, September 29th, 1932: "I accuse the present (Hoover) Administration of being the greatest spending Administration in peace times in all our history—one which has piled bureau on bureau, commission on commission. . . . I propose to analyze the enormous increase in the growth of bureaucracy. We are attempting too many functions."

At Albany, N. Y., July 30th, 1932: "Let us have the courage to stop borrowing to meet continuing deficits. Stop the deficits."

At Pittsburgh, October 19th, 1932: "I regard reduction in Federal spending as the most direct and effective contribution that Government can make to business."

At Columbus, Ohio, August 20th, 1932: "I share the complaint against regimentation. . . . I dislike it not only when it is carried on by an informal group amounting to an economic government of the United States, but when it is done by the United States itself."

At San Francisco, September 23rd, 1932: "The Government should assume the function of economic regulation only as a last resort, to be tried only when private initiative, inspired by high responsibility, with such assistance and balance as Government can give, has finally failed."

A few months ago President Roosevelt addressed a letter to a large number of ministers throughout the country. Presumably it was a serious and sincere appeal to these clergymen for whatever helpful suggestions they might care to make.

But, to the disgust and disappointment of those who accepted it as being what it seemed, it turned out to be phoney—in the language of one nationally-known writer, "as phoney as a china egg"—for it was not even original with the President, but was in almost verbatim copy of a letter circulated among the clergymen of Wisconsin by Governor Philip LaFollette, of that State, two or three months before.

Coming down to an even more recent date, the President, speaking to the nation from Atlanta, Ga., on November 29th, evidently felt called upon to say something that might help to offset the country-wide criticism that has arisen against the constantly unbalanced budget, the accumulated deficit of more than seven billions in little more than two and a half years, and a national debt which, in the same short period, has been pushed to the all-time high of thirty and a half billions of dollars. And he made this utterly staggering statement: (I quote)

"In the spring of 1933 many of the great bankers of the United States flocked to Washington. . . . I asked them what they thought the maximum national debt of the United States Government could rise to without serious danger to the national credit. Their answers were that the country could safely stand a national debt of between 55 and 75 billion dollars."

Naturally, there were immediate and insistent requests that the President name the "great bankers of the United States" who made such a statement. He has steadfastly refrained from doing so. But this fact neither he nor the New Deal's million-dollar publicity machine which is maintained at your expense, can obscure.

On March 10th, 1933—presumably the precise time at which these unnamed "great bankers of the United States" were telling Mr. Roosevelt that the national debt could safely go to between 55 and 75 billions of dollars—the President himself, in a message to Congress, told that body, and through it the whole nation, that if the Government continued to finance deficits by borrowing, by 1934 we would have an accumulated deficit of 5 billion dollars, and that would be (I quote) "a menace to the stability of the Government itself and an insuperable bar to recovery."

Is it any wonder that thinking people stand aghast at the kind of performance they are witnessing—at the cost of untold billions?

At Columbus, Ohio, on September 23rd, 1932, in an utterance that was taken to be of profound seriousness, Mr. Roosevelt said: (I quote) "Before this campaign is ended, I shall state fully to the country my policies with regard to the conduct of the Government. . . . These measures, like my whole theory of the conduct of government, are based on telling the truth."

In his Inaugural Address of March 4th, 1933, directly after taking his solemn oath of office, he said: (And again I quote) "This is pre-eminently the time to speak the truth, the whole truth. . . . Confidence thrives only on honesty."

Is it any wonder that members of the President's own Party are openly among the most astounded at the airy manner in which he has cast aside his most serious pledges? Or that they share the widespread amazement at the adoption and retention, at a terrific cost, of policies which are clearly contradictory in purpose, revolutionary in their aim, and unconstitutional in their operation?

What kind of a campaign may we expect? Well, I make the flat prediction that we will be confronted with one which will sound the depths of demagogery. It will be our job to expose it and turn it to our own advantage. We will have in our favor, also, the fact that normally there are not enough Democrats in the United States to elect a President.

But as offsetting those facts—as revealing something of the terrific handicaps we will have to face—I ask you to remember that the Roosevelt campaign will be aided by more than 4 billions of dollars of your money, placed where it will politically do the most good; and to remember, also, that whereas there were 2,159,835 persons receiving Federal checks in March, 1933, when Mr. Roosevelt went into office to reduce the costs of government, there were, at the beginning of this month, 9,947,956, and the end is not yet.

Of that number, 3,430,000 are receiving A. A. A. checks, and 2,975,000 are recipients through W. P. A. and P. W. A. But the staggering fact of it all is that the 9,947,956 who are now regularly receiving Federal checks, amounts to nearly one-fourth of the total number who voted in the last national election.

I am a Republican with faith in the principles of my Party. I have confidence in the courage, intelligence and inherent honesty of the American people. I am confident that with a fearless, aggressive and unyielding campaign we will win.

But the battle will be bitter and hard-fought. Great advantages, even though they may be unfair advantages, will lie with the other side. It is fitting, therefore, that as we celebrate a minor victory of the past, we take serious note of the greater conflict which lies just ahead.

YARDLEY

The mystery comedy, "Tiger House," the senior production of the Yardley High School, met with huge success on Friday evening before a well-crowded house. Misses Mary and Betty Miller favored with a number of piano selections during the intermission, and Miss Cleone Kauffman gave a number of humorous readings. Mrs. Aaron South is a patient in the Bryn Mawr Hospital, where she is being held for observation. Mrs. South makes her home with her daughter, Mrs. Walter Coleman.

SQUIRRELS TOO CLEVER

LAWRENCE, Mass.—(INS)—Tower hill residents are going squirrelly. Four squirrels invaded the attic of one of the homes of the section. Police and the game warden debated as to whether they should shoot the animals, which, the housewife who made the complaint said, were "wrecking the place." The squirrels, scenting danger, fled. After the police left, the squirrels returned and the game warden started all over again—with no solution to the problem.

"MY FAVORITE DISH --and-- HOW I PREPARE IT!"
—BY—
MRS. C. RUSSELL ELLIS
NORTH RADCLIFFE STREET

I have been following the series of recipes in the Thursday issues of the Courier with a great deal of interest, and it is a pleasure to contribute.

My favorite dish varies with the time of year, but the thing my family likes best at Christmas time is a white fruit cake which I learned how to make from a Pennsylvania Dutch woman, in the Allegheny Mountains.

The recipe:
1 cup butter (scant)
2 cups sugar
4 eggs, beaten separately
1 cup milk

2 $\frac{1}{2}$ cups flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
1 pinch salt
2 pounds raisins
1 pound English walnuts
1 pound blanched almonds
 $\frac{1}{4}$ pound citron, cut in small pieces
1 cup cocoanut (may be omitted)
2 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoons almond extract on almonds
1 teaspoon vanilla on walnuts.

Cream butter and sugar together, add beaten yolks of eggs, add milk and flour, to which baking powder and salt have been added, alternately. Stir in raisins, nuts, citron, and cocoanut. Fold in beaten whites of eggs. Bake in layers in slow oven. Remove from pans very carefully as layers are so rich they are apt to break. Ice with white boiled icing.

LAWRENCE UNABLE TO PLAY IN GAME TONIGHT

Two fast games are looked to be played on the Italian Mutual Ad court tonight. In the first game, Joe Aita's St. Ann's A. A. quintet will line up against the Odd Fellows, while in the night-cap, the Moose will play the Hibbernians.

The Moose will be handicapped in their tilt with the Hibs as one of their ace players, Herbie Lawrence, is on the sidelines with an injury to his knee. Lawrence's position will be filled by either Manager Nev McGinley or Gino Dougherty. If McGinley enters the fracas, then Manager Marty Fallon will play guard for the Hibs to attempt to shut out McGinley from the floor.

A win for the Moose over the Hibs will give them undisputed possession of first place in the circuit as the Third Ward team is idle, resting for its game next week. The Hibboes gave the Odd Fellows quite a tussle in Monday night's game, only the fact that the team was short on substitutes prevented the Big Green from triumphing.

The Odd Fellows must stop the scoring streak of Izzy Kanter if they entertain hope of beating the St. Ann's team tonight. Kanter is the leading scorer of the circuit, despite the fact that his team is still one game short in the playing schedule. Kanter has scored 37 points in four games. If "Shorty" Reimer or "Dunny" Hines hit a scoring spree they may be able to stop the St. Ann's guard.

The Bristol Amateur League is co-operating with the Bristol Travel Club in helping to form a girl's basketball team from this borough. This team will hold practice sessions in the Italian Mutual Ad hall and will probably open its season next Thursday night as a preliminary game to the league contests scheduled for that night.

First game tonight will begin at eight o'clock sharp.

DETTON PINS CHRISTIE IN FRACAS AT ARENA

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 19.—After being outmaneuvered and outsmarted during the major portion of the match, Dean Detton, sensational Salt Lake City grappler, flattened Vic Christie, of California, with a ball-like rush and then pounced on him for a fall to win the wind-up of the weekly wrestling card last night at the Arena.

Detton won the first fall by an airplane spin and body press in 19:35, but Christie came back to pin his foe for the second fall in 4:45 when Detton attempted another airplane spin. The final fall was marked by aggressive wrestling and an abundance of slugging. Detton's superior strength was the deciding factor and as Christie reeled about the ring the Salt Lake City entry charged him into insensibility. He then dropped on him to win the match. Detton weighed 215; Christie, 210.

In the semi-wind-up, Serge Kalmikoff, 240, of Russia, pinned Pat McKay, 223, of Memphis, with a body press after 10 minutes and 18 seconds of tussling. Al Mercer, 214, of Canada, and Chief Chewacki, 245, Oklahoma Indian, staged a rough-and-tumble bout, with the former having the advantage as far as wrestling was concerned, and the Indian adding to his reputation as a "tough bombur." In the first bout of the evening, Mike Mazurki, 229, of New York, pinned Boris Demitroff, 218, of Russia, in 19:55.

Mother of Kidnapped Caleb Milne Arrives At Doylestown Hospital

Philadelphia when he saw the huddled form of young Milne lying in the ditch off the road.

Bringing his car to a stop, Gerhart lifted the youth into the back seat and rushed him to the office of Dr. Bradford Green in Buckingham, four miles away and then notified state highway police.

Dr. Green stripped layers of tape from the victim's eyes and lips while Gerhart cut the rope by which the man's wrists were bound to his knees. After a cursory examination Dr. Green ordered him rushed to the hospital.

On the way to the hospital Milne began mumbling incoherently: "Milne... Milne... Milne!"

Chief of police James Welch of Doylestown and troopers Strickland of the State Police identified him from newspaper photographs.

The identification had scarcely been made when the town appeared over-run with grin-faced G-men.

Welch announced that the victim's camel-hair topcoat, which had been bound to him by several pieces of twine, was badly torn. Welch believed the coat was torn when the kidnappers tossed him from their fast-moving car.

One of the first things the G-men did after their arrival here was to order a detailed inspection of the countryside surrounding Doylestown in a search for the hideout of the abductors.

The victim vanished from the New York apartment which he shares with a younger brother, Frederic Milne, after receiving a telephone call early Saturday from a "Dr. Green of Gracie Square." "Dr. Green" told the youth his grandfather was ill in Philadelphia and that he was to accompany him there.

Milne left the apartment after leaving a note for Frederick telling about the phone call.

The following day Frederick Milne received a letter, postmarked "Poughkeepsie, N. Y." Advising him his brother was being held for $50,000 ransom.

A subsequent ransom demand was reported made direct to the victim's grandfather in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 19.—(INS)—Given a free hand by the victim's release, the Federal Bureau of Investigation today opened an intensive drive to apprehend the kidnappers of Caleb J. Milne, 4th, socially prominent scion of one of Philadelphia's oldest families.

R. George Harvey, chief of the Federal agent's Philadelphia department, began cracking the whip less than an hour after the 22-year-old youth was tossed bound, gagged and semi-conscious from an automobile near Doylestown 12 miles north of here.

Given reinforcements by the arrival from New York, Washington and Chicago of eight of the Department's crack "snatch men," Harvey ordered every G-man in Philadelphia—there are 35 of them—on duty.

Except to admit they are now positive Milne was kidnapped and that they have a "lead," the G-men adamantly refused to divulge any information as they worked with feverish activity throughout the night, speeding about the city and burning up the road between here and Doylestown in high-powered cars with sirens wide open.

"Reports that Milne's relatives, members of the family of wealthy Caleb Milne, Jr., retired textile magnate, had paid $25,000 ransom could not be confirmed.

In sharp contrast to yesterday's almost studied activity at the Milne homestead in the exclusive Chestnut Hill section, the place was a bee hive of activity through the night. Lights blazed in virtually every room of the palatial mansion. G-men sped to and from the house every few minutes.

With Federal agents answering the phone and permitting no one to approach the House, members of the Milne family could not be reached for comment or confirmation of the reported payment of the ransom.

Immediately after police chief James Welch of Doylestown notified relatives of the youth's release, Warren Milne, an uncle of the victim, left the grandfather's home and drove to Doylestown.

The uncle played a central role in the sudden denouement to the five-day mystery. He was said to have been the go-between in negotiations with the kidnappers. An apparently good authority said he had a rendezvous with the kidnappers shortly before Milne was found and at that time paid the ransom.

Another report, however, claimed the ransom actually was paid early yesterday. Relatives and Federal agents refused to discuss either report. The first ransom message purportedly was delivered to the elder Milne on Monday together with his grandson's watch and a warning that failure to pay would mean death to the victim.

Pursuant to adoption of this recommendation, Mr. Forster appointed the following committees:

Harry Bauroth, chairman; Charles F. Boyd, John Myers, Joseph W. Barton, William H. Conca.

I. Johnston Hetherington, chairman; Evan B. Vandegrift, William Boyd, Edwin W. Heath, Howard L. Edwards, Edward Stetson.

Samuel Conklin, chairman; H. B. Berry, George Duffy, Sr., Vincent Lappan, Gus Schaffer, Jacob C. Schmidt, Jr.

Albert Loechner, chairman; Sylvester Brady, Harry Goldman, H. W. White, William Hibbs.

Johnson McAuley, chairman; Chas. Norman, John H. Wischer, Joseph Whiteley, Harry B. Stetson.

Ralph C. Scheffey, chairman; Marvin A. Skeath, Harry R. Ranck, Michael Petrick, P. V. Brown.

Warren Woodruff, chairman; E. Leslie Helwig, Andrew T. MacArthur, J. S. Whyatt, Eugene A. Barrett, James LaRue, William E. Dougherty, T. C. Burns.

Walter J. Rosser, chairman; C. Russell Ellis, Rev. S. Brooks Knowlton, Edwin Hey, William O'Dea, Vincent Dawson, Fred Featherstone.

Alfred McLaughlin, chairman; William Downing, William Grow, Jr., Nathaniel Hoffman, Archer Dougherty.

On behalf of the entertainment committee, Mr. Hetherington announced that arrangements were being made for an exhibition basketball game at the January meeting. At the February meeting Oliver C. Riggs, who took part in various scientific expeditions, including Sir Hubert Wilkins' attempt to reach the North Pole in the submarine "Nautilus," will be the speaker. In March, the high school gymnasium team, under the direction of Coach William E. Dougherty, will give a gymnasium exhibition.

Business having been disposed of the meeting was turned over to Mr. Hetherington, chairman of the entertainment committee. The St. Ann's Club of Bristol had very generously undertaken to provide the entertainment for the evening. This consisted of five exhibition boxing matches between various members of the club under the direction of Johnny Straffe, trainer, with Mickey Gordon acting as referee. The first match was between "Zupe" Zeffries and "Ponk" Zeffries, brothers who have only recently played on the high school team. The second bout featured Frank Capella and Nelson DiLisso, the club's representatives in the 125 pound class, while Nick Marchetti opposed "Dumty" Nocito, diminutive but speedy boxer, in the 118 pound class. Harry Davis, who recently came to the forefront in amateur boxing circles when he defeated the mid-weight champions of New York and Pennsylvania, carried his opponent, Mike Quici, through a brilliant, fast match. The final bout was between Donato Sciarra and Tony Puccio. All matches were clean-cut exhibitions of real boxing skill and good sportsmanship, every participant acquitting himself with merit.

After the boxing matches, refreshments were served in the cafeteria.

missioner Stiles to William Beener, representative of the sponsoring institution, the Yardley Lions Club, to the Ship Committee Chairman, O. S. Penman, and the leaders, Skipper William Whitehead, and Mate Lamar DeSan.

Scout Executive William F. Livermore spoke on "The Boy to Young Man Program For Your Community." He outlined the need for more leaders, and the organizing of a Cub Pack for the boys of nine to eleven years. The need is full home co-operation, and sufficient leaders and committees.

During the evening's commissioning there was an interesting presentation given on the subject of "Canoe Safety" by Skipper Whitehead. Members of the Yardley Clipper officially recognized were the above officers, and Scouts: Boatswains Mates Marshall Duerr and Paul Rothermel; Ordinary Scouts Reginald Brindley, Elvin Cooney, Chester Lear and Arthur Worrell, and Apprentice Scouts Edward Dougherty, Donald Gallagher and Bus Parks. Advance Chairman Raymond Hampton, and Out-of-door Committeeman Chester Lear, Sr., were present.

Visiting Scouts from Crofton included Edward Bramble, Robert Foster, Karl Kipp, Charles Kogel, Howard McGoldrich, Milton Miller, Jack Mossbrook, William Mutch, Henry Roberts, Frank Schweizer, Ludwig Tregl, Palmer Tochterman, and Frank Wagner.

Pueblo Indians Mix Christian Ceremony With Pagan Rites in Marking Christmas

Traditional Ritual of Ancient Sun Worship Still Observed Each Year on Dec. 25, Date of Winter Solstice

Pueblo village at Tons

By ALLEN REAGAN
International Illustrated News Writer
SANTA FE, N. M.—Few Christmas celebrations in United States are stranger than the observance staged by Pueblo Indians of New Mexico who combine ancient pagan rites with the ceremonies of modern Christianity.

Although they have followed Christianity for more than 800 years, this ancient race still carries on the traditions which trace their origin to the historic sun rites of the Romans centuries ago. Dec. 25 was celebrated by them as the date of the winter solstice, the time of year when the days began to lengthen and the rays of the sun increased in power.

The cult of sun worship goes back even farther into the dim origins of history when ancient Egypt paid homage to the force which regulated their harvest and life itself. Primitive races throughout history have done obeisance to fire and to the sun.

The Aztecs and Incas of Central and South America were sun worshippers and left imposing temples, now in ruins, which give an indication of the power and prestige of the sun priest in their civilization.

New Mexico's Pueblo Indians begin their "double celebration" on Christmas Eve when the people gather in the various churches of their numerous villages in the vicinity of Santa Fe. These churches themselves testify to the queer mingling of Christianity and ancient paganism in the beliefs of these native Americans. Several of the adobe houses of worship, in addition to the cross and symbols of Christianity, have walls decorated with pictures and characters which figure in the ceremonies of the ancient sun worship.

The Christmas observance is started on a signal from the tribal dignitary who has been watching the stars, awaiting the moment when the position of the heavenly luminaries marks the beginning of the winter solstice.

When this moment arrives a weird group of figures make their entry into the crowded church auditorium. Each is in costume. The dance may either be a deer dance or buffalo dance, depending upon which village is visited.

The dancer wears the head of a buffalo or deer and his body is painted in vivid hues which create striking effects as the figures move through their ceremonial pantomime to the accompaniment of the throbbing drums. The effect is further heightened when a band of hunters, dressed in full regalia and armed with bows and arrows, join the animal dancers, weaving in and out to the weird strains of a tribal chant sung by the spectators.

These ceremonies are believed to express the hopes of the worshippers that the coming year will be one of good fortune, a year when the sun will bless the crops and bring happiness to his subjects.

When ceremonies in honor of the sun are completed, the church is then given over to Christian services with mass led by a robed Franciscan priest.

Visitors to the villages of the Pueblo Indians on Christmas Eve find the spectacle of intriguing interest. In addition to the church ceremonies, blazing bonfires cast their flickering shadows on the gray-walled pueblos against which are silhouetted the dancing figures of the youngsters as they imitate their elders.
